ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Mervi Rajahonka, DSc in Economics, MSc in Technology and LLM, works as RDI Specialist in the field of Digital Economy in South-Eastern Finland University of Applied Sciences, and Adjunct Research Professor at Carleton University, Canada. Her research interests include digitalisation, working women, business models, service modularity, and service innovations. Her research has been published in several journals in the areas of logistics, services, and management.

Dorota Kwiatkowska-Ciotucha, PhD in Economics, is Professor at Wroclaw University of Economics and Business in the Department of Logistics, Poland. She lectures in the field of forecasting and data analysis, and she is a certified adult trainer. She has extensive research experience, being an author and co-author of numerous scientific publications. Her research interests include people with disabilities in the open labour market, sandwich generation, and the skills gap of employees. Since 2006, she has acted as President of the Board of Dobre Kadry Training and Research Center Ltd., a project company for social and professional support for people with disabilities.

Miet Timmers, MA in History, MS in Population and Development, and Post-graduate Diploma in Business Studies, works as Lecturer at Odisee University of Applied Sciences and Researcher at the Centre for Family Studies of Odisee in Brussels, Belgium. She is trained as a family mediator. She has published research-based, practice- and policy-oriented books, book chapters and articles on multigenerational workforce, multigenerational housing, intergenerational projects, and the combination of work and family.

Urszula Załuska, PhD in Economics, is Assistant Professor in the Department of Logistics at Wroclaw University of Economics and Business, Poland. She lectures in the field of data analysis, forecasting, and logistics management. She has participated in many research projects and has been an author and co-author of numerous publications. She is a certified adult trainer. Since 2006, she has been responsible in Dobre Kadry Training and Research Center Ltd. for the implementation of projects for people with sensory disabilities, especially deaf people. Her main areas of research include people with disabilities in society and in the workplace, employee competences today and in the future, and mature people on the labour market.

Kaija Villman, MMus in Arts Management, is Project Manager in the field of Digital Economy in South-Eastern Finland University of Applied Sciences, Finland. She has participated in numerous national and international EU-funded projects related to creative industries, service development, and digitalisation. She is experienced in coordinating interdisciplinary projects, workshops, and training and she acted as the Project Manager for the Time4Help Finland project. Her research has been published in journals in the areas of services and management.

Veerle Lengeler is Career Coach at Emino, a Flemish based organisation. She is trained as a psychotherapist and has more than 20 years' expertise in coaching people from very diverse groups, including at least 15 years as a Career Coach. She is also an experience expert from the sandwich generation. Sustainable living, strengthening or restoring connections in all areas of life is one of her motivations.

Tim Gielens is Senior Researcher HRM at the research centre 'Center for Sustainable Entrepreneurship' (CenSE) of the Odisee University of Applied Sciences, Belgium. He is also affiliated to Hasselt University. He holds master's degrees in Organisational Psychology and in HRM. His research focusses on the intersection between people, organisations, and society. Domains in which he has built up expertise are sustainable HRM and sustainable careers, talent mobility, inclusive work, employee engagement, work-life integration, the new ways of working, social dialogue, and the future of jobs.
