

The First British Crime Survey

Emerald Advances in Historical Criminology

Series Editors: David Churchill and Christopher Mullins

This series embraces a broad, pluralistic understanding of ‘the historical’ and its potential applications to criminology. Providing an inclusive platform for a range of approaches which, in various ways, seek to orient criminological enquiry to history or to the dynamics of historical time, the series also offers a platform both for conventional studies in the history of crime and criminal justice, but also for innovative and experimental work which extends the conceptual, theoretical, methodological and topical range of historical criminology. In this way, the series encourages historical scholarship on non-traditional topics in criminology (such as environmental harms, war and state crime) and inventive modes of theorising and practising historical research (including processual approaches and futures research). The series thus makes a valuable contribution to criminology irrespective of disciplinary affiliation, theoretical framing or methodological practice.

Firstly, I would like to express my thanks for the generosity of my unnamed interviewees who kindly shared their memories of working on the British Crime Survey. The book has benefited from the encouragement of Vanesa Fuentes, Lukas Griesl, Matthieu de Castelbajac, Rebecca Shortt, Elaine Wedlock and Tomas Percival. I would like to thank Pamela Cox for her early support for this project and Patricia Castellano for her assistance at the National Records for Scotland. I want to thank the friends, colleagues and teachers at Goldsmiths, University of London, the University of Warwick and the University of the West of Scotland, each of whom have helped shape this book. I would like to thank my former colleagues in the Civil Service, without whom I would not have understood which way was up or down. I would like to thank the Emerald editorial team for their professionalism, Dave Churchill for his thoughtful feedback, and the anonymous reviewers of my proposal. Additional thanks go to the staff at The National Archives, the British Library, the Black Cultural Archives, the Institute of Criminology, Cambridge, and the London Metropolitan Archives. This research was made possible through the British Academy/Leverhulme Small Grant Fund, project code SG2122\210910 and an Economic and Social Research Council Doctoral Studentship.

Special thanks to Tom Percival and Sasha Bergstrom-Katz, for giving me a place to stay and the provocation to get this book going. I would like to thank my parents, Nicola and Edmundo, for their lively faith. This book was only possible due to the love and grace of Fidelma Hanrahan.
