

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book is the result of discussions I had with Jeff Ulmer while we were colleagues at Purdue University during 1999–2000. I believe that Jeff and I share the common goal of using the Sociology of Crime, Law and Deviance series to bring cutting edge research in the Sociology of Law to a broad audience. I thank Jeff for inviting me to edit this specialty volume on the legal profession.

While the volume was conceived at Purdue, the work of assembling contributors and editing happened after I moved to The University of Toledo. The Department of Sociology and Anthropology has been very supportive of this project, providing me with workspace and clerical support. In particular, Barbara Chesney, Department Chair, has been very helpful, including commenting on the introduction to the volume and the contributors' biographies. Judy Haas has also provided excellent clerical support.

An edited volume cannot be produced without significant cooperation from the authors that contribute their work. I thank all of the authors for being responsive to my comments and deadlines.

Finally, Ann Marie Davenport at Elsevier Science has been indispensable, answering my questions about formatting the text and other production issues.
